Wildlife Stories

A worker on an oil field stepped out of his truck to discover a crushed nest on the ground at his job site, just steps away from where he parked. As a “big bird guy”, he was eager to help in any way that he could. The area was too dangerous for the nestlings to survive. He scooped the orphans up and contained them in his lunchbox, which was the only thing he had handy. When the baby birds arrived at Greenwood, we identified them as nestling Meadow Larks. They thrived in our care and grew up quickly. We were recently able to release them back into the wild.

Most wildlife photos by Ken Forman*

A family that lives along the Big Thompson tracks the local nesting Canada Geese families every spring. During some intense snow in May, the river started to rise. They noticed a pair of two very small goslings who had been separated from their parents. The little waterfowl were trying to approach a family with larger goslings but were not fitting in. The caring observers called Greenwood to see what could be done.

Once they brought them to Greenwood the orphans were assessed and determined to be healthy. Our licensed rehabilitators fostered them out to another family of Canada Geese with similar sized goslings. They were instantly accepted.
