IT's Raining Crickets! Mallards Get a Treat

Wildlife Stories

On his way out for an early morning bike ride, a young man discovered two birds who had become trapped in a sticky substance in an alley. He gently removed the birds and rushed

Many of the calls we get at Greenwood are about animals that seem very out of place in their current surroundings. Sometimes these animals need rescuing, as was the case with one young Rock them to a nearby animal shelter. There he was referred to Greenwood, and he immediately drove the 40+ minutes to bring them to us.

Once they arrived, we bathed them to get rid of the sticky substance and assessed them for injuries. They were identified as Barn Swallows and given time to rest and recuperate before they were successfully released. Our animal care staff hypothesized that the mysterious sticky substance might have been Sweet and Sour Sauce, so the swallows were fondly nicknamed "Sweet and Sour Swallows".

Squirrel found alone on a couple's flat and treeless property. When they saw the tiny animal curled up near their driveway, they worried it might be dead.

One of the women gently tapped the animal with her foot, and it moved slightly and started to shiver. Knowing something was wrong, they picked it up and put it in a box under a heat lamp. They knew better than to feed it after finding instructions on Greenwood's website. The next morning, they brought the lethargic mammal to us. After just over two weeks in our care, the little squirrel was released and quickly ran off into the wild.
