Lots of Mammals and Birds in Our Care!

Greenwood is grateful to remain open to wildlife, especially because this is our busiest time of year. If you've found an animal that you believe is orphaned or injured, call us at 303-823-8455 (9 am - 4 pm daily) or visit www.greenwoodwildlife.org.

With baby squirrels, birds, waterfowl, and raccoons in our care, we need supplies to help them thrive. Shop our wish list online through Amazon Smile to have items shipped directly to us. You can also check out our list of needs and drop off items at our Rehabilitation Center in Lyons. Please call when you arrive at the center!

It's Colorado Endangered Species Week!

On May 15, millions of Americans will be celebrating the 15th annual Endangered Species Day! Endangered Species Day is a day set aside to learn about and work towards the protection of all the plant and animal species in our nation that are at risk. This year, we're celebrating with our friends at Rocky Mountain Wild as they host Colorado Endangered Species Week, May 10-16!

For each day of Colorado Endangered Species Week there are exciting activities, including reading materials, direct actions to take, and things to watch to help us learn about and advocate for our Colorado imperiled, threatened, and endangered species. And we'd like to invite you to participate!

Take the #OutsideEveryDay Pledge

With schools closed and activities cancelled, it is more important than ever to get kids outside to connect with nature and wildlife. That is why Greenwood is partnering with other organizations and agencies from across our community to promote the Outside Every Day Challenge!

Sign the #OutsideEveryDay pledge, and agree to try your best to get the children you care for outside every day! You will receive regular emails from OutsideEveryDay.org with activities, contests, safety tips, and encouragement. Check out some activities at: www.outsideeverydaychallenge.org

Email photos of your ventures to chelsea@greenwoodwildlife.org for a chance to be featured on Greenwood's Facebook with a shout out to your kids.

Wildlife Stories

When a woman in Longmont heard one of her cats eagerly chattering and moving from window to window, she looked outside to see what caught the kitty's interest. She noticed her neighbor's cats stalking two very young squirrels. The woman immediately ran outside to save the babies.

Once she collected the two, she noticed another cat getting ready to pounce on a third. She quickly scared off the cat and grabbed the other sibling. This was one of the rare situations where we couldn't recommend a reunite, given the

Although it is rare, we sometimes get wildlife parents together with their offspring at Greenwood. This little Deer Mouse wandered out of hiding while a woman was working in her kitchen. She noticed the animal and scooped her up in the closest container available, which was a large soup pot. It was likely that their cat had brought the tiny mammal into the house. Before the woman got in contact with Greenwood, the furry creature gave birth! Little did the rescuer know that the mouse was pregnant.

It was important that the new mama danger of the cats.

The woman brought them inside and kept them in her bathroom, quiet and warm and away from her pets. Since our center was already closed for the day, she brought them in the next morning as soon as we opened. The three sisters are thriving at Greenwood, and we can't wait to release them together once they are old enough.

get antibiotics, since cat bites can often have unforeseen complications. The woman brought the animal and her new offspring to us for help, pot and all (we returned the pot).

The babies were about the size of jelly beans and, unfortunately, not all of them made it. The two in the picture thrived with their mother caring for them at Greenwood while she underwent treatment for the cat bite. They were recently released together! We're happy we were able to help this little family.
