Baby Critters are Here

Baby Killdeer

Juvenile Golden-mantled Ground
Squirrel

Nestling Black-billed Magpie

Greenwood has already taken in nearly 400 more wild animals than at this time last year. This is going to be a hectic season!

Our animal care support staff field over 100 calls a day from concerned citizens. Wildlife rehabilitation centers are especially busy in the spring because the majority of the patients we admit are babies. In 2021, over 70% of our patients were orphaned.

If you stumble upon an animal you think is in need:

1. Call Greenwood at (303) 823-8455 or visit our website greenwoodwildlife.org.
2. Do not touch the animal unless instructed to do so by our staff.
3. Do not feed!!! A caring rescuer attempting to feed a baby can do more harm than good.

Nearly All of Our Spring Squirrels Have Been ## Released

Wildlife Stories

With spring often comes rainy weather. When the streets are wet and the roads appear slick, Greenwood often receives injured grebes.

These waterfowl are unique in that they need at least 10 feet of open water to take flight. When they see a glossy road after a storm, they at times mistake it for a body of water. Upon landing, they can injure themselves and are at times unable to lift off again.

Such was the case with a Horned Grebe that came to Greenwood this month. The bird was found in the street, unable to fly. Our medical team carefully examined the waterfowl and luckily only found a few minor scrapes. They treated the shallow lesions and allowed the bird time to rest. Once it recuperated, staff found a large body of water it could use for take off, and the bird headed quickly to the skies, free again!

An adult Say's Phoebe was recently found covered in glue in Broomfield. Sadly, its feathers were stuck together, and it was unable to fly. The caring rescuer brought it to Greenwood for help.

Upon arrival, the feathered critter looked to be in rough shape and obviously exhausted from the ordeal. Rehabilitators gave it a respite before carefully bathing it and removing the glue from all its feathers. It took several baths and treatments before the phoebe was glue-free.

Now the bird recovers in a cozy enclosure, complete with a cornucopia of its favorite eats while it regains strength. We hope that within the next few days, the critter will show off its ability to fly again so it can happily return to the wild.
