Wildlife Stories

We are so glad this Barn Swallow was able to be released. She came to Greenwood after being found with two other nestling Barn Swallows. One had died when the rescuers found them, but they brought the surviving two to Greenwood. Shortly after arriving, one more passed away. But there was still hope for this last baby! Rehabilitators evaluated her, hoping for better news. They noticed she had a foot injury, so she was put in a cast and given pain medication. We planned to heal her foot and raise her with others of her species to be released into the wild before winter migration starts. After 53 days at Greenwood, she

Four baby Deer Mice were found to be orphaned after a rescuer's dog attacked their mother. Thankfully, the dog was pulled away before it got to the babies.

Mice take extra care, time, and effort to raise when they are very young. They need to go home with a licensed rehabilitator so they can be fed every few hours. Lucky for these little ones, we have folks willing to get up through the night. They stayed in home care for several days before they came back to our center. We put them in a bigger indoor enclosure with a hamster wheel for exercise and natural items like twigs and leaves to remind them of the outdoors.

was returned to the wild with several other swallows that she grew up with. They sprang out of the transport box and fluttered above for a moment before zooming off. We know she will be happy gorging on insects until she migrates south with her fellow swallows.

They have also graduated to "mouse mash" instead of formula. We hope to release these special mice before the temperature drops more, so that they can prepare for a winter in the wild.
