Crows Swing Happily

Wildlife Stories

Recently at Pickle Gulch campground in Blackhawk, some campers observed odd behavior by a group of four young Pine Squirrels. They were running up to the crew, showing no fear of humans. The squirrels were small and likely still nursing from their mother.

Greenwood recently admitted our 3,000th patient of the year! In 2020, we didn't reach our 3,000th patient until October. Animal intakes have been busier than ever with the closing of Wild Bird Rehab in Denver. If this trend continues for the rest of the year, we will have treated nearly 18% more animals than in 2020.

The group grew concerned when the babies continued seeking their attention and drank thirstily from the water they had left out. One of the campers had previously volunteered at Greenwood and decided it was time to bring the siblings to the Center for help.

Upon arrival, our staff evaluated the young critters and determined that the babies were orphaned. They were covered in mites, dehydrated, and hungry.

After mite treatment, the Pine Squirrels were weaned from the bottle and transferred to our outdoor caging where they will once again acclimate to outdoor sounds and smells. After a time of self-feeding, the quartet will be returned to the area they were found.

Patient 3,000, a House Sparrow, was admitted on August 12th. The bird had suffered injuries from a cat attack. Sometimes wounds sustained from cats aren't critical, and antibiotics and rest are the only treatment needed to prevent infection.

Unfortunately, our staff found that its condition was much too serious to be treated, and it had to be euthanized.

Patient 3,000 is a prime example of how Greenwood's services are needed in our community. Our organization is the only of its kind from Pueblo to the Wyoming border. With the help of rescuers and donors, we can alleviate some of the impacts humans have on the wild world.
